The Shepherd and Wedderburn relocation remains one of the most complex projects undertaken by Heartwood throughout our time as a business. The project involved the phased move, clearance, and reinstallation of multiple departments within an occupied environment. The project demanded exceptional coordination across stakeholders, suppliers, and timelines to deliver continuity of operations while achieving the client's sustainability and compliance objectives.

Midway through the programme, a key internal stakeholder was required to step back from their role, creating a potential risk to overall project continuity. Our team took an active and embedded position within the client's structure, providing leadership support, communication management, and day-to-day coordination to maintain progress and ensure critical decisions were made in real time.

We oversaw logistics, asset management, ethical clearance, and the reuse and reinstallation of furniture and equipment, ensuring compliance with the client's environmental commitments and operational standards. Despite the project's scale and evolving challenges, delivery remained on schedule and within agreed parameters.

Our ability to adapt, collaborate, and assume a more integrated role in client-side management was central to the project's success. The outcome strengthened our working relationship with Shepherd and Wedderburn and demonstrated our capability in managing high-risk, multi-faceted relocations with precision and accountability.
